

BLOOD GIVEN TO DETECTIVE

McGinley Killed Assailant After Being Wounded Critically

Detective Anthony F. McGinley, who was shot Saturday night while investigating a family fight at 29 Hancock Place, Manhattan, received several blood transfusions from fellow-patrolmen yesterday at Sydenham Hospital, where his condition was reported as critical.

Surgeons halted an operation because of his weakened condition. They had removed three slugs from his body. Despite his serious wounds, the detective shot and killed Louis Austen, 24, years old.

According to the police, Austen beat his wife, and a friend of Mrs. Austen telephoned to the police

The New York Times

Published: December 25, 1944

Copyright © The New York Times